

Healthcare Resources for Medical Students

Liaison Committee for Medical Education accreditation standards clearly state that the individuals from whom medical students seek health care must have no involvement in the academic evaluation or promotion of the students receiving those services. Medical students are, therefore, actively discouraged from seeking health care from faculty or residents of the institution. The institution, however, cannot prohibit students from choosing their provider. The associate dean for student affairs, who has no role in student evaluation, is available to assist students in seeking care outside the institution and will be responsible for keeping students apprised of resources. If a student elects to establish a provider relationship with a faculty member or resident, that individual is precluded from any evaluation activity (irrespective of the wishes of the medical student) because of dual-relationship and conflict of interest issues. See <http://musom.marshall.edu/students/policies/> for a complete description of the policy.

Referral Sources

In keeping with this policy, a list of healthcare providers (i.e., primary care physicians and mental health providers) in the community who do not have a role in teaching or evaluating medical students is attached. We encourage students to be proactive in meeting their healthcare needs. This list is not considered to be all-inclusive; rather it provides a list of resources with whom we are familiar and for whom we are certain are not involved in teaching and evaluation of medical students.
